

Boston University Wheelock College of Education & Human Development Center on the Ecology of Early Development

Research Assistant

Multnomah County Preschool for All Research & Evaluation Partnership (Summer 2023)

The Center on the Ecology of Early Development (CEED) at Boston University is an early childhood policy research center led by Stephanie M. Curenton, Ph.D. The mission of the center is to conduct applied equity-focused research to inspire policy leaders and practitioners to cultivate opportunities that optimize Black children's wellbeing and ability to thrive. Through a research partnership with Multnomah County's Preschool and Early Learning Division, CEED is helping to study the implementation of Preschool for All using a racial equity framework.

Boston University is hiring research assistants located in Multnomah County, Oregon to support data collection and analysis activities for the project. Positions are available part-time or full-time temporary for summer 2023 (with option to extend beyond).

Qualifications:

Having professional and personal experience with early childhood education settings, ethnic/racial minority children and/or being bilingual/bidialectal is preferred. Applicants from racially and ethnically diverse backgrounds are strongly encouraged to apply.

Application Process:

Interviews will begin in June 2023 and positions will remain open until filled. To apply, please submit application materials in one PDF, and include (1) cover letter describing your interest, experience, fit with the position, and interest in part-time/full-time position and timeframe; (2) CV/resume, (3) names and contact information for three references. Email materials to "CEED Search Committee" at ceed@bu.edu and in the subject line indicate that you are applying for the "Multnomah Research Assistants" position.

Renumeration:

The pay rate for this position is between $20-25 per hour and is commensurate with experience.
